Amnesty report blasts shackling female inmates

NEW ORLEANS — As a 55-hour-a-week customer service representative, Michelle Radloff lived paycheck to paycheck.

A divorce three years ago split the single mother of a 6-year-old daughter between her new job and an angle on a home.

Six months ago, she was hired as a window clerk at the Menasha Post Office, doubling her pay. No longer will she "have to live day by day with my last penny," she said.

Radloff is among a dozen low-to moderate-income people on a waiting list to join the city's least affordable housing program. Tenaya's kitchen was designed with special accommodations such as low-profile counters, sinks and a stove.

Menasha program paves way as pioneer in the pursuit of new affordable housing

By Tanya Krueger

TANYA KRUEGER, 25, and her Chiuhua, Trevor, are shown Friday in their Menasha house. Tenaya, who was born with spina bifida and scoliosis, and her mother, Terri, share a duplex to Menasha's pioneering affordable housing program. Tenaya's kitchen was designed with special accommodations such as low-profile counters, sinks and a stove.

The board intends to use as much as $1 million to cover an insurance liability on November ballot

The new report includes an updated and expanded listing of states that have taken action regarding sexual misconduct and discrimination. It also includes a number of tips for those seeking a job and faces discrimination.

The board intends to use as much as $1 million of its savings in the plan. It is possible that even more is needed to achieve an insurance liability on November ballot.
